Learning Styles

Throughout my education I've heard a lot of talk about learning styles. Whether it be visual, auditory, or tactile. Most of my teachers, especially in high school, believed in trying to combine all three in their teaching. I think this is the most effective way, particularly in a large class where students learn all different ways. I personally feel like I learn best with a mix of visual and tactile. Despite the huge importance placed on these learning styles, I feel as if they don't play as big of a role as thought. I think the most important part to learning and retaining knowledge is the desire to learn. Without that, students don't want to put in the work to learn the subject matter. So, even if the students fall under a specific learning style, they would be less likely to retain it if they have no desire to do so.
